In past years, the TaiwanICDF has championed the UN’s call for the “eradication of extreme poverty and hunger”; and more recently, responded to pressing issues in global food security. In doing so, we have proven time and again that a fully functional agricultural sector influences social and economic development for the better, bringing positive change to individual communities and benefiting the whole of society. The successes of agricultural development go much deeper than mere statistics.

We will continue to implement projects focusing on agricultural production, and we will strengthen the development of our partners’ agricultural sectors. At the same time, we will continue to promote the upstream advantages of superior varieties of produce, while increasing the depth and breadth of downstream marketing operations. This will continue to be a key component of the range of solutions used by the TaiwanICDF in assisting the agricultural development of its partners.
Agriculture: Not Simple
